From: IO/PHO - Bob LoftisSubject: Informal Notes on the 10/26 Rump Core Group Discussion of Rwanda OptionsRELEASED IN PART AmjR
B1, 1.4(D), B6

The rump core group met to discuss the anticipated UN options on Rwanda prior to the interagency team travelling to New York on November 1. After 15 minutes of somewhat exasperating discussion of the possibility of finding some country [redacted] to take on the role of providing a division or more of troops to disarm and move the ex-FAR, we moved on to more achievable goals.

We decided to recommend to the UN a concept along the following lines, which corresponds roughly to Khan's suggestions and to Dellaire's concepts.

- o Create a UN force to provide temporary security in the camps. It would consist of at least one battalion but probably more (JCS will flesh this out). The force's duties would include providing daytime security in the Zaire camps for relief workers. Simultaneously, one battalion would move from camp to camp to: provide full security for relief workers, war crimes investigators while they work among refugee population (presumably the force would have to protect those who spoke to the international workers); provide safe corridors/escorts for those who want to return home; conduct limited disarmament; escort moderate Hutu ex-FAR leaders into camps to persuade ex-FAR to re-integrate into new Army.
- o Tanzania would provide security in own camps. We would send survey team to assess needs, then lead a tin cup exercise to push other countries to provide wherewithal. We would find what we could from our assets. This would be outside the UNSC rubric.
- o We continue to press on creation and activation of the War Crimes Tribunal - essential to undercutting the extremist Hutu leadership.
- o Encourage the UN to sponsor military integration talks (return to Arusha pre-April), and agree that UN would have a role in re-integrating the military if negotiations succeeded (El Salvador, Cambodia, Mozambique models)
